

41.04.05 – International Relations

MA Program: Aspects of Cross-national and Religious Dialogue in the Modern World

Duration: 2 years, intramural

Degree: Master

Number of state-funded places in 2020-2021 academic year: 0

Tuition fee in academic year 2020-2021: pending

Objectives:

The program provides an in-depth study of international relations and puts an emphasis on religion and the national factor at all stages to properly define their role and encourage sustainable development of international relations, strengthening international cooperation, countering terrorism, extremism and radicalism. Understanding the role of religion and interethnic relations in the modern world is a necessary competence of an international specialist in public policy, business and international humanitarian relations.

Subjects:

- Ethnic and Confessional Factors in the Foreign Policy of the World Leading States
- Religion and Culture in International Relations
- Migration Processes in the Post-Soviet Space
- Interfaith and Interethnic Relations in Modern Russia
- Religion and Identity
- English

Career opportunities:

- an employee with the diplomatic institutions to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation, international state and local authorities
- a specialist of the international department of business companies and non-governmental organizations
- an international journalist in international media
- an employee with international publishing houses
- a specialist in organizing international cultural exchanges and programs
- an analyst and researcher in the field of international relations
- a lecturer in institutions of secondary vocational and higher education

Entrance exam:

Fundamentals of international politics, Theory and history of international relations